

Magical Origin!

Concept:

- Magic is new, about 10 years since it's been unlocked
- The thing that made magic is slowly eating the world, also people are attempting to either gain more power, or stop/reach the magical origin to save the world

→ magical origin is a rift into a magical world ~~where~~ mag

What is the Magical Origin?

~~magically origin is a rift into a magical world where~~

What is this Magical Origin?

It is a growing mass of what seems to be a "word"

~~in the very center is an alchemical symbol that~~ in the very center is an alchemical symbol that represented the unity, surrounded by transmutation formulae to transmute time into the past.

Where we begin:

- a small village ~100 miles away from the origin suddenly disappears and is replaced by an entirely different village of who seem to be chieft of out of the stories.

What are implications of the Magical Origin?

→ it is growing at a rate of ^{a radius of} 1 km per year

→ At this point, it's been growing for about 50 years already. The origin is centered on a Cathedral the Central Cathedral of a major religion of the world, which people start construing as a sure sign of the apocalypse.

→ people begin to migrate as far away from the origin as possible

→ people are born with magical abilities of varying strengths and varieties.

→ minimal humans.

→ some are born with various physical deformities.

→ some have powers

→ storms occasionally spawn from the origin, when storms pass, strange occurrences happen.

Sometimes entire towns disappear, get displaced, or are replaced by some strange foreign town.

→ Refugees are treated differently by different towns

→ Some countries are taking advantage of this situation by directing refugees towards rivals cities and territories, sometimes with agents that sow discord.

→ A new religion formed based on worship of the magical origin. Curses are agents of destruction, "purifying" the population. Their "prophet" is a woman who had survived the origin, transformed into an "angel"

Episode 1: Refugees

The ~~town~~ ^{village} of Brown Carrot, in the outskirts of the trading outpost of Aqua Terrina, is a primarily agricultural one. There are 4 homesteads that surround a little stream that provides ample irrigation to the many fields.

Near the center of the village, where the roads meet, is a ~~town~~ ^{village} square of modest size where a general store, an inn and a small militia garrison are located.

Beyond this little village is a wood a couple of acres large. The stream isn't large enough to transport lumber through, so a road from the village runs directly through the woods into a small lumberyard.

Some trappers sometimes stay in the cabin by the yard in exchange for a small fee.

1 square = 25 ft.

Recently, a trapper had come into town to take a body into the militia outpost. The body, one ~~of~~ a young boy, youngest son of the Hardpebble family, one of the four rich families of Brown Carrot.

The little boy, Kid Hardpebble, was missing for a week and was already thought to be dead, so this in itself was not a surprise. The surprise was how. They found him bound tightly by ~~the~~ vines that seem to have grown from inside his own body, his eyes seem to have been removed from their sockets.

Of course, the Hardpebble family pressed for the culprit for their son's death be found, no matter the methods used, and offered a handsome reward, and perhaps even a betrothal to their daughter, Petunia.

Hendrik "Hank" Hardpebble IV

The patriarch of the family Hardpebble, he is constantly attempting to ennoble his House by any means necessary. Being the fourth in a line of successful merchants, he hopes to cement his family's legacy by marrying one of his 3 daughters or 5 sons into already established noble families.

His latest regarding ~~the~~ the death of his son Carmine also called "Kid" by his friends, is centered upon an arranged marriage to the daughter of an impoverished noble house from Acqua Termina. Hendrik is convinced that the patriarch of the Caxton House, and Lord of the Brown Carrot had something to do with his son's death.

Carmine "Kid" Hardpebble

A recent corpse engorged by plants and mushrooms, found by a trapper in the Purple Wood. The youngest of Hank Hardpebble's sons, betrothed to Agrippina Bombastica of Acqua Termina was always one to explore the woods and caves around Brown Carrot. It was typical for him to disappear for a day or two, but never longer than that, and usually with one or two cohorts in tow. So when he disappeared this time, none were too concerned. ~~When it was~~ After four days, however, his mother had prodded Hank to find him. After 8 days, his body was found.

Kid, 14 years old, was very genial and well-liked. Every person in the village liked him, and even those with bones to pick with the Hardpebble family tolerated, or even enjoyed his presence. So much so that the young daughter of Caxton House, ~~Petunia~~ Bourgainville, fell in love with him. Surprisingly, their romance was silently tolerated by the Caxtons themselves. This romance was an annoyance to Hank Hardpebble, however it turned his prospects of connecting their family to a much more influential noble house. Hank did let the little romance play out for the moment, until he finalized a betrothal with an influential, but debt-stricken Acqua nobleman's daughter. Kid was furious at the news! He was often flogged by his eldest brothers to curb his defiance to their father.

Petunia Hardpebble

Youngest of the three Hardpebble daughters, and younger than Kid, Petunia is typically dismissed as a "child." They'd be right of course, ~~as~~ she being right prior to the cusp of her womanhood at 12 years of age is the sort of childish that denies connection with being a child.

She dislikes being told to play with other children outside, or any other such frivolity. She prefers reading books in silence, or learning embroidery from her mother. She particularly despises the advances of would-be suitors as well as sycophants who only pay her heed to get in the good graces of her father.

The sudden death of her brother had caused her much despair. They were once very close and were often in each other's company. This changed when Kid and Bourgainville Caxton became romantically involved. Bourgainville and Petunia both study letters under the same time with the minister of the Church of the Divine Masschists. They've grown to be fast friends since, and Petunia had harbored secret feelings for her close companion. She feels guilt over ~~her~~ her resentment of her brother.

On the day her brother's body was found, changes were happening to her body as well. ~~The legend to anyone~~ ~~one~~ began to possess magical abilities.

Lord Preston Caxton

Patriarch of the minor noble house of Caxton, Lord Preston is an ambitious nobleman who longs for the return of his house to its former glory and then some. ~~It is~~ It is the fourth generation since the Caxtons were forced to cede a huge portion of their estate to creditors. Largest of the land, to the merchant Hardpebble.

Preston strived to learn all he can about how markets worked and how best to expand their wealth. He has learned to be a savvy investor, putting money into ventures that had proved to be a stable source of income. ~~Through~~ Under his leadership, the Caxton house had recovered nearly half of the lands they've lost. He had funded the construction of a lumberyard in the nearby forest which pays dividends in the regional markets.

While Lord Preston typically ~~is~~ is disinterested in local affairs, he does still wish to repurchase lands lost to the Hardpebbles as a matter of family pride. So when

His youngest daughter had formed romantic associations with Kid Hardpebble, he tolerated the affection, hoping to find some way to take advantage of it, knowing how Hank Hardpebble wanders into nobility quite so easily.

What Lord Preton is concerned with, however, is the sudden march of refugees entering the region from the eastern lands. There have been reports that these easterners are brigands who have been raiding some of his caravans, cutting substantially into his profits.

He believes that Kid's death is due to one of these Eastern Brigands.

Bougainvillea "Ginny" Cotton

The youngest son of the Cotton house, and the only daughter. Bougainvillea really dislikes her full name. She prefers to be called Ginny. Being the youngest, like Petunia, and a female Besides, she is typically treated as a child. Unlike Petunia, Ginny uses it to her advantage. Ginny often acts like a precocious youth, prodding with questions only children can typically get away with. She is rarely rude, always curious and is seen by many as the darling of the town.

She'd only ever been rude to Kid Hardpebble, who was always trying to hang around her, pointing out her act. This slowly developed into a romance, ~~with Ginny~~.

Kid's ~~death~~ disappearance was quite a surprise to her since ~~that~~ she rarely kept anything from her. She was raising concerns about him, but the answers were mostly brushed away, ~~because~~ of mostly since Kid had a tendency to explore for a couple of days. When they found Kid dead, she was horrified and ~~and~~ angry, blaming the local militia for not caring about the well-being of the villagers they were supposed to defend.

She wishes to take matters into her own hands. Hoping to find leads to Kid's death herself, she will go to the lumberyard herself to interview the trapper that found his body.

Captain Ian Pollock

Captain and Commander of the Brown Carrot militia. Once a highly-regarded member of the Passah Kingdom Regular Army, Captain Ian Pollock was banished to this backwater patrol when he was caught having an affair with a member of the Passah aristocracy.

His military record saved him from the gallows. Instead he was transferred far away from the capital as possible. ?

He took the punishment quietly, rising for years upon years upon years, becoming disillusioned and bitter the longer he stayed.

The actionless border that Brown Carrot and its environs represent is plain torture to the once-distinguished former Captain of the 5th Legion. At most he and the militia deal with civil disturbances, some odd footpad or highwayman, some stragglers and border crossers.

The disappearance of Kid Hardpebble did not concern him when Ginny Cotton reported it to his garrison. There was always some person reported missing, some person forgetting to tell their lover that they visited the brothels in Aqueduct. Besides, Kid is the sort to go into the woods to "explore" whatever that meant.

When the body turned up, Pollock became distraught, guilty that his inaction led to the death of a promising youth. He'd stop drinking and begin to personally investigate the events.

Gillon Turner

Proprietor and operator of the local inn and tavern called the Gusty Rabbit. While he does operate and maintain the inn, the land and structure is owned by the Cottons. In exchange for operating, he is charged a reasonable tax. A percentage of income less operating expenses.

Gillon himself, however, has full control and responsibility, and he takes it quite seriously. He sources as much goods locally, but is known to purchase more "exotic" food items from travelling merchants when available. He himself does the cooking.

Rumor has it that Gillon once worked as a cook in the Royal Palace. A rumor he would neither confirm nor deny. His dishes, as rum, to the casual gourmand, to be fit for a king!

Gillon himself is not much of a gossip unlike most innkeepers. He satisfies himself to the comfort and well, satisfaction of his customers. He does have a special fondness for both Kid and Ginny, however, and the death of Kid left him mortified. He worries very much how Ginny will take his death, that she may act rashly.

Obel Trent

Shopkeep of the ~~Black~~ ^{Green} Coat General Store and ~~employee~~ merchant in the employ of Hank Hardpebble. Obel is a wearily man who often ~~tries to sell you items you may never need.~~ tries to sell you items you may never need.

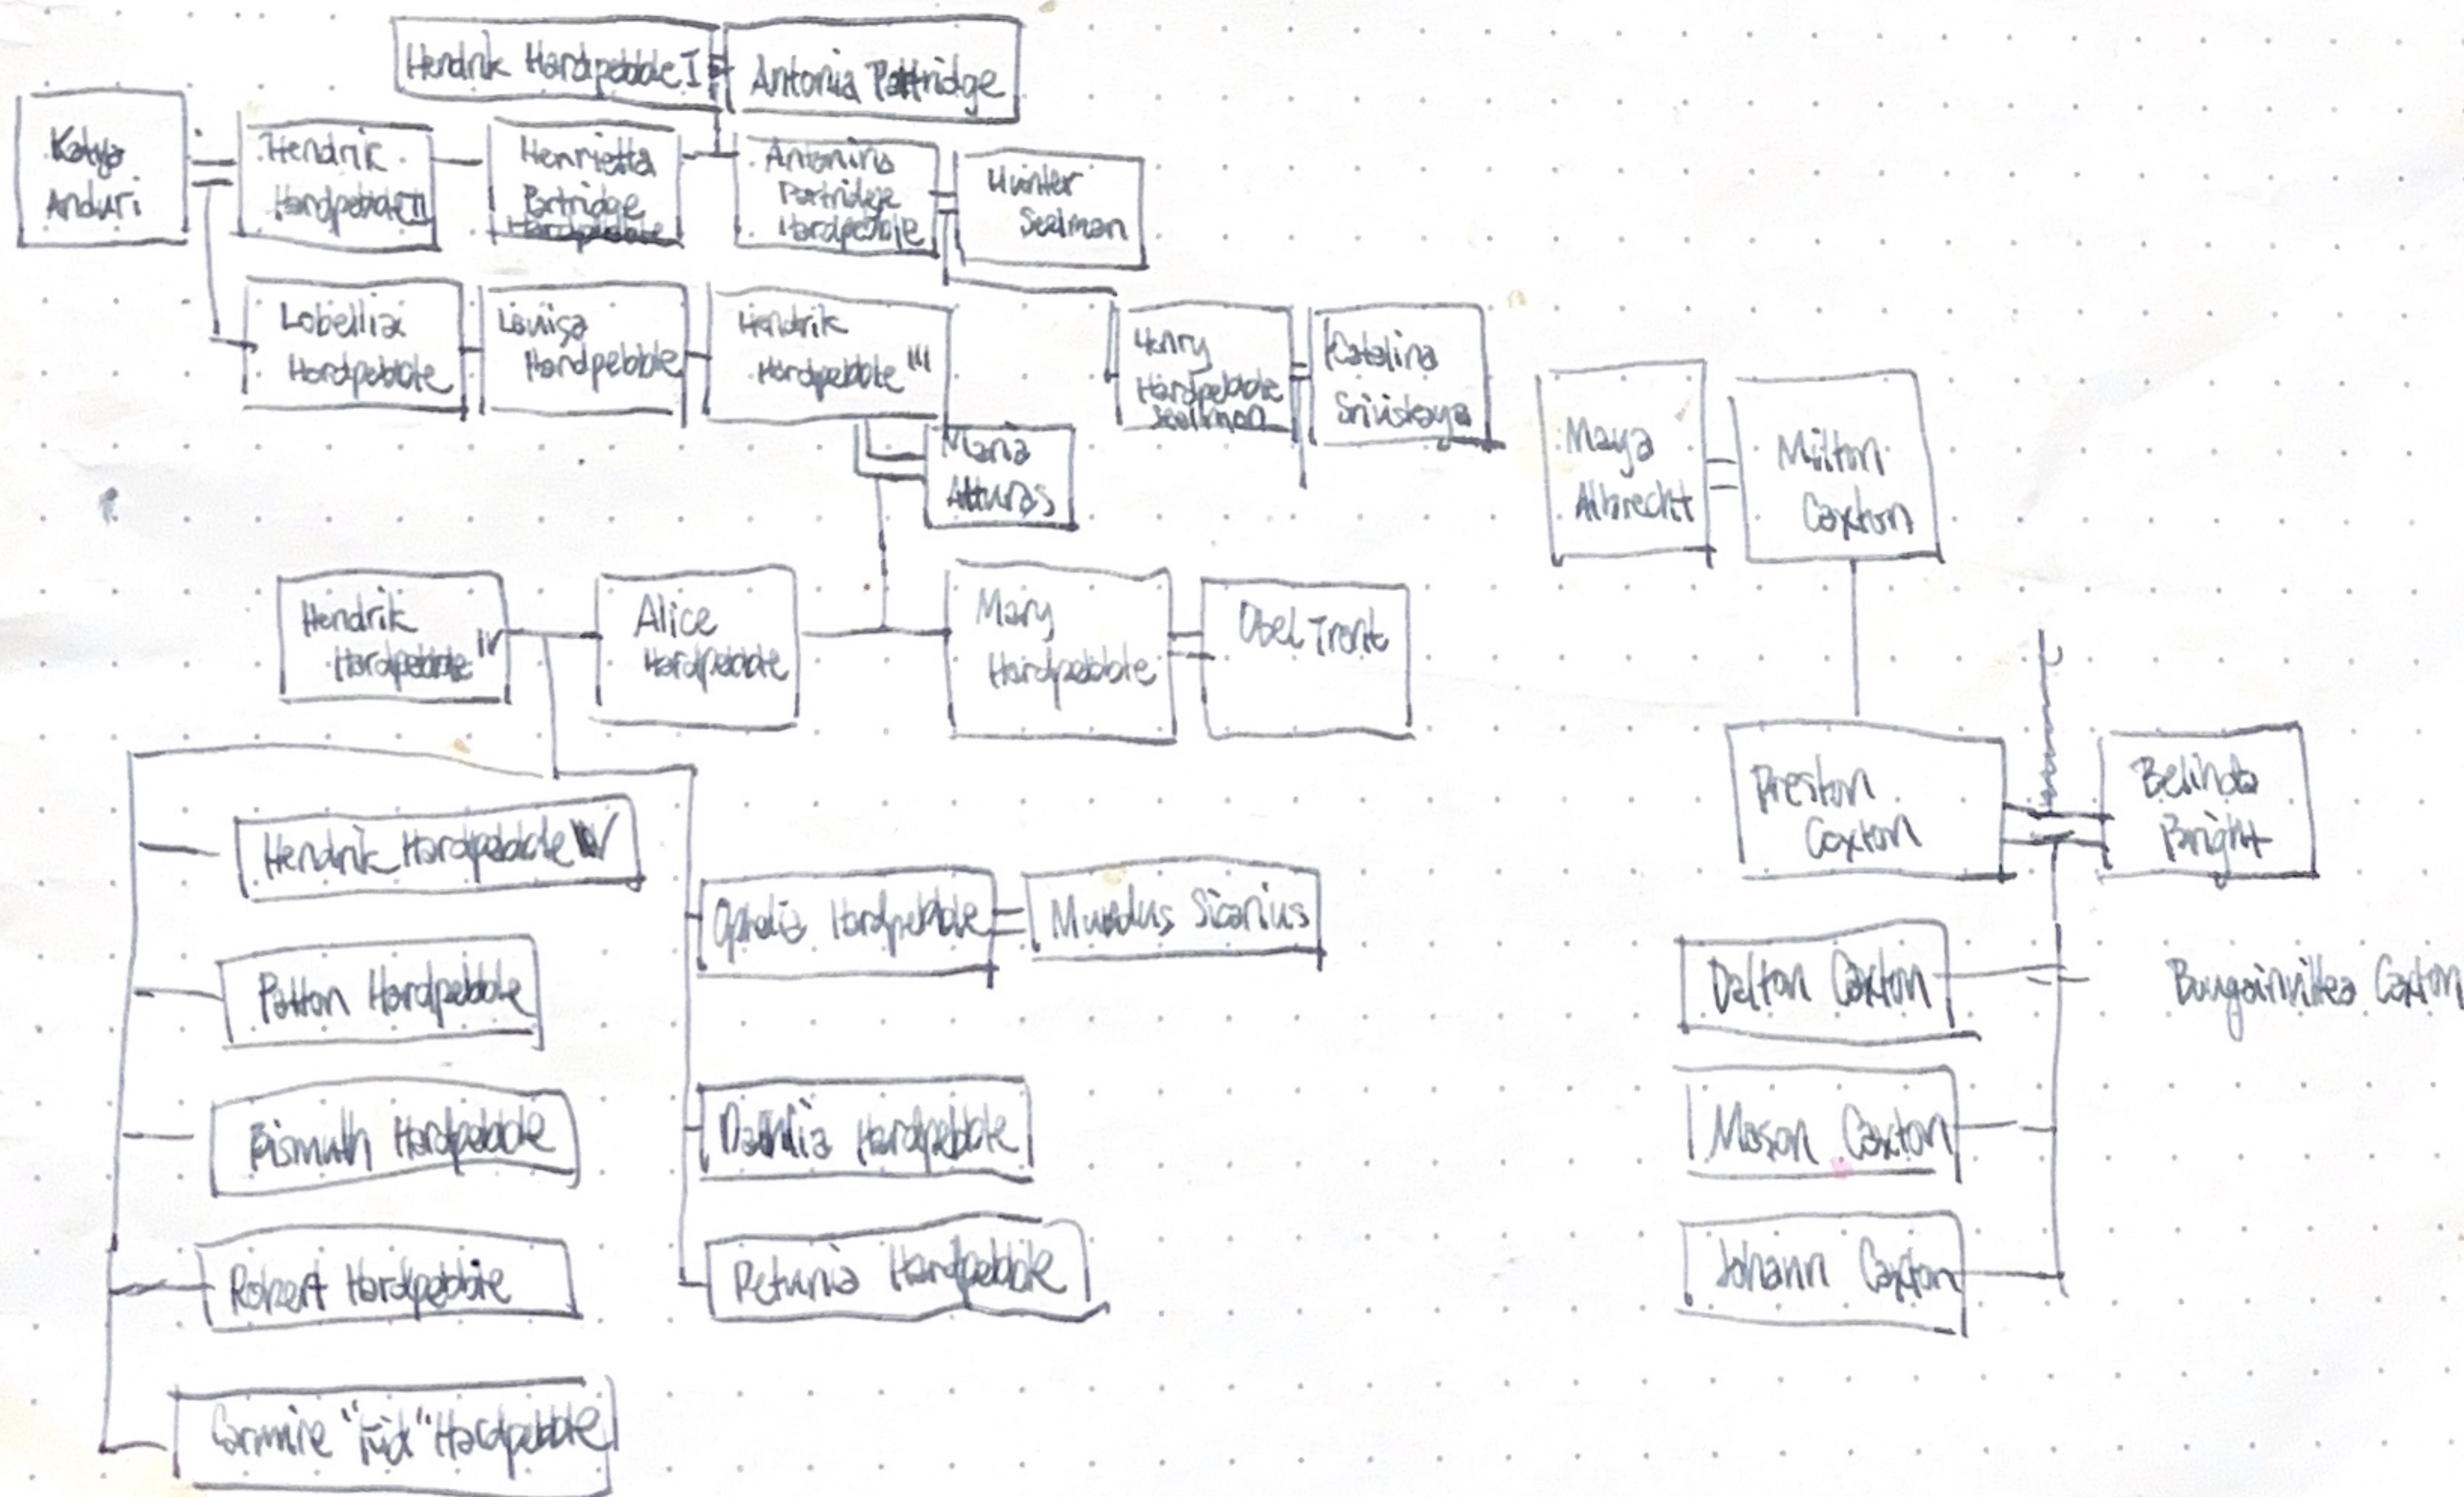

Once upon a time, Obel Trent was a shyster that sold "miracle cures". Concoctions made from various "herbs" and sweeteners, mixed with a bit of alcohol with no actual proven medical benefit. In fact, the "herbs" used is typically whatever leaves he ~~he~~ could find while brewing plus honey.

One time he had accidentally put a poisonous stem of leaves into a batch, causing many to suffer from severe bouts of diarrhea. He was put into prison by the local magistrate of the town he was in, ~~pending~~ pending trial for misleading the general public. Luckily for him, Hank Hardpebble had business in the area and paid for his freedom. Since then the man was ~~was~~ utterly loyal to the Hardpebbles.

He was given free-rein to run the General Store, granted that he be on Hank's beck-and-call. Hank uses him to collect as much information as could be beneficial to their operation.

He was married Hank's sister Mary.

The Hardpebbles

Kingdom of Besah

- Absolute Monarchy, absolute primogeniture
- Population: 31,000,000
- Raw material Resources:

Lumber	Milk
oil	Gemstones
silver	Coal
Iron
Copper
Grain

Bordered By:

Apgar Confederacy	West
Kolha Ahuria	East
Tanduarua	Northeast

An elite group within the Poasan military consisting solely of women in the various arms of the forces. They recruit promising young women and train them for various field duties, typically of a clandestine nature.

Private Goldilocks Westfall was recently recruited and was sent on assignment to Brown Linnol Village as her test and initiation into the sisterhood. She does not know why she was chosen nor why this assignment.

The 13 are, in truth, ~~magic~~ women who are with the ability to cast magic. The women they induct into their group are those who bear markings of such an ability. Goldie's unusual yellow eyes marked her as capable of such miraculous powers.

They are called the Timber, perhaps, due to their original number. Women whose secret abilities were leveraged by the Poasan Military for the first time during the conflict with the Apparians. Since then, they've become a pivotal, if secret, part of the Poasan intelligence network.

Initiation of members are decided based on certain auguries and imprecise readings or divinations on which triggers would cause the initiates innate powers to manifest themselves. Once the powers arrive at a certain ~~level~~ level, they accept the member as their sister.